The relevance of the internationalization strategy at the Primorskaya State Academy of Agriculture, RF

In the modern world knowledge is the basis of economic, social and political power, the processes of shaping the world economy of knowledge characterize the growing international competition - all this makes the university develop new strategies and vectors of development that are aimed at maintaining and enhancing the university's competitiveness in the educational market.

The most important mechanism for the exchange of advanced pedagogical experience in the field of modernization of higher education is the participation of a modern university in international university networks and associations, which contributes to a significant strengthening and diversification of university ties with the outside world.

For many years, the international activities of the Primorskaya State Academy of Agriculture have been aimed at fulfilling the indicators of the effectiveness of monitoring the universities of the Russian Federation, as well as assisting in the development of the Academy's core activities through academic mobility, transfer of scientific and educational technologies and cooperation with advanced international scientific and educational centers.

Since 2016 our academy has been participating in the new Erasmus+ program, within the framework of the International Credit Mobility project, which provides scholarships to undergraduates from the Forestry Institute of Primorskaya State Academy of Agriculture to study at the Polytechnic Institute of Bragança (Portugal) and which increases the opportunities for academic mobility of students, undergraduates, graduate students and teachers, as well as strengthening the cooperation of Primorskaya State Academy of Agriculture with the world's leading universities.

The student's credit mobility is important not only from the point of view of developing and improving the learning opportunities in foreign universities, but also from the point of view of the development of our academy, in which mobility becomes an incentive for comparing and updating training programs, improving the quality of teaching, and improving the activities of international and student services.

Mobility is useful not only for students, but also for the quality of education in general, as it contributes to the development of an internationalization strategy and has a positive impact on the training system in our academy.
